

JUSTIN ZMICH PERSONAL PORTFOLIO

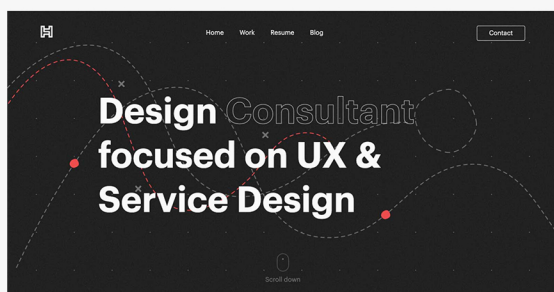

I want my portfolio to reflect my work ethic by conveying the problem, the proces and the outcome; because employers want to know how you approach a design problem.

My portfolio should define the dimensions of each project, outlining its problems, goals, challenges and features. Furthermore, I should inlcude my approach/invlovment in each project with detailed copywriting. In the end, I want my portfolio to craft a narative around how I work and design that is simple and easy to follow for employers.

This UX portfolio is intended to showcase to potential employers my best work as a student and as a visual designer. I want to show them how I work and aproach problems. The website itself should be a representation of my knowl- edge of good visual design.

Portfolio Inspiration

Hello, my name is Jason a user experience designer from San Francisco. In the 7th grade, I spent six months perfecting the ultimate skate ramp. It lasted through ten scorching California summers. I create memorable, long-lasting products.

What can we build together?
